Main St., a project supported by the Adams County Regional Economic Development Authority. The project, called Greater Adams Medical Center, is being developed by Pamela and Robert Wixson. The Wixsons own 30 acres on which the building is planned. They are also developing the first phase of a four-story building at 19 S. Grand Ave. in downtown Quincy. The county and the city have a long-standing cooperative agreement on economic development matters, and last year the county hired the region's principal economic development specialist. The Wixsons have applied for a tax-increment financing, or TIF, district to be used to finance the Greater Adams Medical Center. The proposed district includes a large portion of Adams County and the city of Quincy. The TIF law requires that a majority of all property taxes generated within a proposed TIF district be paid to the district. The Wixsons plan to pay for the Greater Adams Medical Center, including the site at 15 W. Main St., by using TIF revenues. The Wixsons had planned to seek

The purpose of this study was to evaluate the safety and efficacy of a small incision approach in a cohort of patients undergoing laparoscopic ventral hernia repair using a surgical mesh. Between April 2002 and March 2003, 38 patients with a mean age of 46 years (range, 17-75 years) underwent laparoscopic ventral hernia repair with Surgisis mesh. Most of the patients (36 patients; 94.7%) had symptomatic defects, and the average defect size was 6.1 cm (range, 3.5-10 cm). The average operative time was 172 minutes (range, 120-280 minutes) for all patients. The mean hospital stay was 2.2 days (range, 1-5 days). All patients returned to their normal activities within 1-2 weeks, and there were no recurrent hern 2d92ce491b
