A: As mentioned in the comments, this is not a good idea. You can use the flash drive to install software on your computer (it's a much better idea than using a DVD, especially if you are going to boot your computer with this). If you still want to do it, this is a way to do it: First, you need to create a recovery DVD or flash drive to get back to the software you need to reinstall. You can download it at Once you have your recovery DVD or flash drive, create a folder on your flash drive and name it after your system name (ex: "Macintosh HD" then "recovery"). Put your recovery DVD in the drive and reboot your system. You should get a message that pops up asking you what you want to do. Answer with "Macintosh HD", then "recovery". Follow the instructions on the screen. Now that you have the software installed, you can just insert your flash drive and boot with the DVD/USB. You will get the option to boot from the CD/USB and you can follow the instructions on the screen. After that, you can install any software you want on your 2d92ce491b
