Greetings from end of world Wink.Q: Create a pseudo-unique function in a PHP array So, I have a WordPress site I've been working on and I have a nested array inside a plugin for some logic. The problem I am having is that I have been trying to write a function that will detect if a value exists in the array, and if it exists, it will return false, whereas if it doesn't exist, it will return true. Basically, I have: $items = array( array( 'id' => '1', 'title' => 'foo' ), array( 'id' => '2', 'title' => 'bar' ), array( 'id' => '3', 'title' => 'baz' ), ); And I want a function that will return true if any entry (of any id) of the $items array exists, and false if all entries in the array are empty. If I was doing this in JavaScript, I'd just write: function allEmpty (items) { return items.length === 0; } Since this is PHP, I cannot find anything to do this. I can use array_search to find it, but I can only tell if it is there, I cannot access the value. I have also tried using array_key_exists, but this does not work either. The key will be specified in the nested array, however. A: How about this? function allEmpty($items) { $existing = array_fill_keys($items, false); return empty($existing) && count($items) === count($ ba244e880a
