Interest is contagious. If one student is enthusiastic, the others will most likely respond. This is not only true of a classroom situation but also a work situation. If you find out that the players are more interested in your company, will you draw them into a project? Or rather, have they drawn you into the project? The answer to these questions will determine how effective you will be at your job. What you need is to determine how to interest them in their job. This is where games come into play. If you are looking for ways to interest your players in their game, think of games as being a means of discovery in a way that educational material is not. 4 tips for using board games to build a team. You don't want to get in the player's way, so keep in mind that any questions should be asked during downtime between action. You can ask a player to explain what he is going to do, but make sure it doesn't interfere with the game. The following are ways you can entice your players to do something productive: How To Fool Everybody Teaching English: Mobile Phone is an important tool used to keep it updated with new course materials and chat with the trainer. Have the trainer's mobile number available to your students before the start of the module. Instruct your students to get in touch with the trainer if they have any questions.
